Abstract

Present study focuses on an assessment of climatic, geomorphic, and environmental factors at a regional scale. Peltier's model combined with RS data and GIS techniques is employed to accomplish the goal of this study and find out the characterization of the selva morphogenetic region. The climatic data of mean annual rainfall and temperature (last 63 years) are used for the delineation of the morphogenetic regions. For the characterization, wind speed and humidity were also used. In the physical parameter, relative relief and slope are used. This definition is logically right and acceptable. Different thematic maps from various sources such as Geomorphology of India; Geological Survey of India (GSI), Geology and mineral map of Maharashtra (GSI), Soil region map of India; National Atlas of India, Soil map of Maharashtra; National Bureau of Soil Survey and Land Use Planning (NBSS) are used for analyzing the Characteristics of selva morphogenetic regions. Selva region received average annual rainfall in the region is 2,001.97 mm. The average annual temperature in the region is 26.49°C. The mean annual humidity is 61.96 % and the range of 28.50%. The mean annual wind speed is 7.62 km/ph and ranges from 3.80 km/ph. The total population of the lineament is 571 and the length is 12090.73 km. most of the lineaments are oriented in the SW-NE direction with a density of 0.347 km/sq.km.

Abstract

The global population has been increasing rapidly in the past decades. This global population increase has a significant impact, such as urbanization. Urbanization is a global phenomenon. Urbanization is the population shift from rural to the urban residence. Due to the development of IT parks and the automobile industry, people are migrating towards Pune city, which leads to the haphazard & unplanned development of Pune city to its outskirts. However, this leads to a change in the land use land cover of Pune city. It will have an impact on the natural vegetation cover as well as on the agricultural area. The present study mainly focuses on the changing land use land cover pattern of Pune city. The main objective of this study is to assess land use, the land cover change in Pune city over three decades (2001-2021) and its impact on vegetation cover. The spatiotemporal study of land use land cover (LULC) was carried out for three decades, from 2001 to 2021, using remotely sensed multi-temporal LANDSAT satellite data. Data were analyzed using modern technology like Remote Sensing (RS) and Geographical Information Systems (GIS). By analyzing this data, it has been found that the amount of built-up area has increased dramatically. In contrast, the area under agricultural and natural vegetation cover has decreased. Uncontrolled urbanization and land use land cover change raise many environmental issues like loss of agricultural land, animal habitat, and natural vegetation cover. So, monitoring urbanization plays a significant role in cities' planned development, which will help protect the environment.

Key words: Urbanization, LULC Change, GIS, RS
